Pop culture has taken a decidedly anti-feminist turn in recent years. In the wake of the Women's March, no doubt aided by Donald Trump's myriad assaults on women's rights — for his own sexual predations and misdeeds — men now wear pink pussy hats while feminists demonstrate for transgender and reproductive rights. We're hearing a lot about "mansplaining" — mansplaining is a mansplaining is a mansplaining, evidently — and other offensives on men's unwarranted privileges and chauvinism. To some extent, this is one reason feminists in general, and women in particular, must become more involved in the politics of others. And women must be more involved in shaping the policies of the U.S. government, including the presidency. At the New York Times, a video of Sen. Bernard Sanders addressing the protest was seen as particularly despicable, as it appeared to lack a sufficient grasp of what feminists stand for. "I was told that this event was a direct result of President Trump's recent comments about women," said Sanders, who is Jewish. "That means that American democracy, and the progress that we have achieved as a people, is now at risk because of the hatred, the bigotry, and the misogyny that was spewed by the candidate for president of the United States." In reality, it's crucial to understand that the Women's March was only the second-largest anti-Trump protest in the U.S. (the original Women's March, held on the day after Trump's inauguration, attracted more than 4 million people). It was certainly larger than the anti-Trump protests that took place across the country on the day after Trump's inauguration. But there is no doubt that, with the help of Hillary Clinton, Sanders's campaign, and several other groups, there are millions more Americans against Trump than for him. When the pop culture storm subsides, the stark reality is that America is one of the most tolerant nations in the world and has the second-most liberal Supreme Court in the history of democracy. This is not to say that we should not strive for more comprehensive and equal rights — though in some instances of bigotry against women, Muslims, and LGBT people, more progress may be best achieved by the hands of those already recognized as having suffered from prejudice. But in other cases — for

Synthesis of novel amine/phthalazine-based lanthanide(III) chelates and investigation of their luminescence. Seven novel phthalazine based ditopic chelating ligands (H(2)L(1-7)) and seven novel ditopic amine based ligands (H(2)A(1-7)) were synthesized and characterized. The kinetic stability of ligands with Ln(3+) ion in aqueous solution and solution of N, N-dimethylformamide was studied. The luminescence properties of Gd(3+) doped LaF(3), Nd(3+) doped LaF(3), Tb(3+) doped LaF(3), Eu(3+) doped LaF(3) and Gd(3+) doped LaF(3) were studied and the results indicate that phthalazine based H(2)L(1) ligand is one of the most suitable ligands in lanthanide complexes since the chemo-, photostability, and quantum efficiency of this complex is very good. Photoluminescence spectra of Eu(3+) show two main emission lines; (5)D(0)→(7)F(0,1) at (560±20)nm and (5)D(0)→(7)F(2) at (593±20)nm. Comparison of N-acetylcysteine and N-acetylcysteine-GSH resin in the treatment of acetaminophen toxicity. In this study we compared the efficacies of N-acetylcysteine (NAC) and N-acetylcysteine-glutathione (NAC-GSH) as an antidote for acetaminophen (AAP) toxicity in mice. The half-time of NAC and NAC-GSH was determined to be 20 and 24 minutes, respectively, in the presence of AAP. Administration of NAC-GSH but not NAC resulted in a recovery of liver glutathione. Liver glutathione levels were significantly reduced by AAP (p less than 0.01). Administration of NAC-GSH, but not NAC, completely prevented AAP-induced liver glutathione depletion (p less than 0.01). Hepatic glutathione levels in mice treated with the NAC-GSH-AAP combination were
