To investigate the degree and frequency of metal artifact in magnetic resonance (MR) images of the knee in the presence of metallic implants, and to examine the dependence of the artifact on the amount of metal, the region of the knee, and the type of artifact. MR images obtained from 46 volunteers (age range, 20-44 years) with metallic implants (n = 14, all types of metallic implants [artificial joints [n = 8], intramedullary nails [n = 1], screws [n = 3], plates [n = 1], and staples [n = 1]) were retrospectively evaluated for the presence of metal artifact. The knees were divided into two groups. Group A included knees in which the implants were located in the posterior femoral condyle and in which the implant was made of steel. Group B included knees in which the implants were located in the anterior femoral condyle and were made of titanium alloy or aluminum alloy. In both groups, image distortion in the medial femoral condyle, the medial tibial plateau, and in the posterior and lateral aspects of the femoral condyles was graded on a five-point scale. The minimum artifact score (no distortion of anatomy) in images of group A was 2.59 +/- 0.26, and that in group B was 2.48 +/- 0.35. The mean scores were 2.52 +/- 0.29 and 2.46 +/- 0.33 (P =.23). The scores for the medial femoral condyle and the tibial plateau were not significantly different between the two groups (P =.32,.07), whereas that for the lateral femoral condyle was significantly higher in group A than in group B (P =.012). The higher score in group A was found only in knees with an intramedullary nail (P = ca3bfb1094
