Microscopic and macroscopic properties of solid matter containing submicrometer poly(methyl methacrylate) particles: a computational study. The presence of submicrometer poly(methyl methacrylate) (PMMA) particles in glass has been shown to lead to an enhancement of the heat conduction by as much as an order of magnitude when the glass is heated below its glass transition temperature. Attempts to understand this phenomenon are usually made in a semiclassical manner where the glass is assumed to be a homogeneous phase and heat transport is viewed in terms of the mean free path of propagating phonons. The work presented here addresses this hypothesis by focusing on the spatially heterogeneous response of small regions of glass containing PMMA particles. A thermal model is developed that takes into account thermal interactions between PMMA particles and phonons. In addition, the thermodynamic properties of a glass containing small domains of PMMA are addressed. The particles are viewed here as a set of weakly interacting subsystems. The subsystems are either individually or collectively in thermal equilibrium with an external heat source. The predictions of the model are compared with experiments performed on PMMA-loaded glass.Q: Setup private RabbitMQ cluster with Vhosts, virtual IPs and static routes I have multiple RabbitMQ nodes behind a single load balancer. Due to lack of Vhosts in RabbitMQ, all configured Vhosts are added on the single box, and the public facing IPs are a pool of the load balancer. Is it possible to setup a cluster by creating private Vhosts with different private IPs and do this by using Cilium's network policy.
