23/2/2019 ... Similar problems I have a form page with an ErrorDocument redirecting to a different page. The intent is that the user moves on to the next page and corrects his mistake. But if the form is submitted in error, the error document still redirects the user.

I checked the main errors, and the ErrorDocument is correct, all I need is a redirect. I did some searches and found this site. The first answer doesn't seem to address the issue completely, but the other two. The first one of these solutions/answers looks hacky to me, and the other one doesn't work. Any advice? A: Ok, problem solved. I had some markup in the error pages file that conflicted with the site's normal error pages, causing the user to be redirected there. I also had a redirect on the form submit page that would redirect to the same place as the error pages. The combination of the two meant that if there were errors, the user was sent back to error pages, and the error pages were never called. I also have a page that shows 404 errors, which I've since moved to a separate error page, so that solved the problem there, as well. Q: Google Guava - using interfaces in static methods I'm using Google Guava in an android app. I'm testing my code with the unit tests included with Guava, but they don't run the test of my static methods because they are not static
