First, we need to identify which port on your router has the internet port. Then we need to find a firmware that supports adsl2+. Download the firmware below, and then flash it onto your router (back up everything).

Q: SQL Server Stored Procedure is not giving output from multiple joins I have 2 tables, People and Jobs. People has columns ID and Name, Jobs has columns ID, Name, and Placement. The jobs column would have the PlacementID from the People table that's most recent for each ID. I made this stored procedure but it always returns blank.

A: You have a spelling error in your query (the JOIN should be after the subquery). Also, JOIN clause need to be on columns name.

SELECT p.ID, p.Name FROM People p LEFT JOIN (SELECT ID, MAX(Time) as MaxTime FROM Jobs GROUP BY ID) t ON t.ID = p.ID

To get the placement you can also use the JOIN operation on the MAX(Time) value which is always the current one

SELECT p.ID, p.Name, t.MaxTime FROM People p LEFT JOIN (SELECT ID, MAX(Time) as MaxTime FROM Jobs GROUP BY ID) t ON t.ID = p.ID AND t.MaxTime = p.Time is provided for in a second embodiment of a method of forming a substrate with a planarized under surface, the method comprising the step of: [0014] (a) bonding a first substrate, wherein the first substrate includes a first surface and a second surface, to a second substrate such that the first surface faces the second surface, and the first substrate and the second substrate are configured to form a chamber therebetween; [0015] (b) withdrawing a volume of gas from the chamber; [0016] (c) sealing the chamber and introducing a fluorine compound to the chamber, wherein the fluorine compound and the substrate can form a carbide layer on the first surface; and [0017] (d)

The modem has a high-speed USB 2.0 port to connect a high-speed. The book was written by S. Ross Perlin, and it is an excellent resource, as long as you read it with an open mind. I haven't read the book, but I've read an abridged version of it (about two-thirds), and have given it to a few friends to read. The book doesn't contain many technical details, but it gives a complete picture of a form of cause and effect that is broader and more important than the specific ways in which individuals behave. Perlin says that the base of all social order is intention. In my reading of Perlin's book, this is in fact the case, though it might not be obvious. Let's be clear that I am not saying "no one knows what they are doing," or "the concept of rational behavior has no utility." I am saying that even as you try to improve your own behavior, it is important to recognize how the non-rational aspects of human nature may interact with your actions, even to the point of obscuring your intentions. The next step is to recognize how complex these interactions are, and how they may lead to unintended consequences. In my own writing and in the writing I've done for others, I try to have the non-rational components of human nature make explicit so that they don't get swept up in the calculations of "rational" behavior. These questions are particularly important for economists, because most of them don't have a deep appreciation of the social interactions at the heart of human behavior. I know that econ majors are very good at analysis. But the question of how much of our behavior is actually guided by logic in the long run is an important one that we should all address. This is, after all, the question behind a lot of questions about efficient markets. I can't imagine why it is so hard for an econ major to appreciate the dynamics of the market. It's just like a teacher having a hard time teaching basic arithmetic to his own students. How can they be so
