from a button click, so I'm seeking a way to detect that the action has completed. (this is what I actually need, but I will describe the wider problem below) Consider the following scenario. I have a button that when clicked is used to load a message into a UIIMagingControl (or any other type of ImageSource, really). Because the load operation will block the thread for a period of time, I want to prevent the button from being used to trigger that action until the load has finished. This means that on the button click, an action starts, and when that action has completed, the button click can continue. I don't like the idea of having to perform a statement like "action.ExecuteAsync(actionCompleted);" on every button click, because that's unnecessary code in the loops. So I'm looking to find a way to detect that the action has completed. I don't think this is possible, but I'm hoping someone can point me in the right direction. Thanks. A: You can use the ActionCompleted event from System.Windows.Interactivity.TriggerAction class. A: If you want to have your "load message" run asynchronously, you should take a look at the ILoadMessageAction property of the Item c9d1549cdd

Biblical Fortress Dungeon There were no dinosaur fossils, since the Cretaceous period ended at the K-T boundary. By then, the world was blanketed in ice and the dinosaurs were already extinct. But there was a mighty dinosaur-like creature, that was still living, in the sea-covered continent. The city was named Aranyapura, the city of king Ravana, and it was an ancient city.It had a magnificent castle.There was a fortress called "Aristocrat's Heaven" that protected the city. The people of the city were prosperous.They were equal to kings and princes.There were 10 Kings, so in all, they were 40 men.They lived off the riches of the city. The city was called Varanasi, the city of the Gods, and was a holy city.There were numerous temples, a famous one called "Sri Peetha Peetha", and a magnificent idol of the God Siva.It was the greatest symbol of the Gods. It was also the place where Shiva and Ganga, God and Goddess of all rivers, met and mingled with each other. There was a large rock known as "Surya Tirtha", a holy fountain, that Shiva had blessed. It was in this city that he had done countless of miracles.There were 100 streets leading to the tirtha, and it was said that everyone, who went there, could be fulfilled. The city was considered as the greatest place, since it was the birthplace of Lord Shiva.People from all over the world came to the city to worship. It was famous for its "Coo-shanat", a medicinal liquor, that was very soothing to the eyes, and also good for one's stomach. There were many temples, and Keshav Mahadev temple, was the most famous, since Shiva was born here. But as time passed by, the King built more houses on the banks of river Ganga, which led to the Surya Tirtha, and the life of the people declined. All the families were mixed, but there were still many poor people in the city. They were all gathered together, and it was like a family.But the street children of the city were not a part of this family.They had to live a life of suffering.
