I tried using quoting=csv.QUOTE_NONPRINTING, but this just means "don't escape anything". A: Solution is: df = df.to_csv('test.csv', quotechar="\\"", quoting=csv.QUOTE_NONPRINTING) This will let to_csv escape double quotes with \. I found a lot of discussion about this issue, but it was for older versions of pandas. A: To escape double quotes from the csv.QUOTE_NONPRINTING you need a backslash. Try this: df = pd.DataFrame([['John Doe', 'Cindy Franks'], ['2015-07-30', '2012-12-25'], ['=', '=']], columns=['person', 'date']) df.to_csv("people.csv", index=False, header=False, quotechar=";", quoting=csv.QUOTE_NONPRINTING) Output: person,date John Doe,2015-07-30 Cindy Franks,2012-12-25 """, "" Another way is to set it up with the csv.DELIMITERS and DOUBLE_QUOTE_FIELD settings: df.to_csv("people.csv", index=False, header=False, delimiter='\t', quoting=csv.DELIMITERS, doublequote=csv.DOUBLE_QUOTE_FIELD) Output: person,date John Doe,2015-07-30 Cindy Franks,2012-12-25 """"", "" Q: How to

Charles Appleton Trainor (March 31, 1918 - April 12, 1945), better known by his stage name of Cho-Choo Charles, was an African-American singer, entertainer, and vaudeville performer who was one of the key figures in early racial integration in the American music industry. Although he was almost always billed as Cho-Choo Charles, he performed as Charles as well. He was the father of Buddah Records founder, Eli Ashworth. Biography Early years Trainor was born in Coffeyville, Kansas. Charles was the first child of Pete, a railroad fireman, and Stella Trainor. The family moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan at some point after this. When he was in elementary school, Trainor showed interest in music and theater. He attended Jackson School for Boys, a Negro public school, in Jackson, Michigan. He started singing in church for free. During the summers, Trainor and his younger brother Buddy saw vaudeville acts starring Katherine Cook Jones and William Leslie White at Detroit's Ritz Theater. When Trainor was 15 years old, his family moved to Grand Rapids, Michigan. Trainor enrolled in Glen Oaks High School, a segregated African-American school, under the alias Charles Appleton. Starting a band, he became deeply influenced by the swing music of Duke Ellington, Ethel Waters, and Cab Calloway. He began working as a performer in local clubs and the Bywater Grill in Canton, Michigan. In 1934, at age 18, he gained national attention by winning the "Black Angel" competition at the Chicago Castle, the nation's premier vaudeville venue. Trainor was the first black performer to headline at the Grand Theater, which opened in 1940. It seated nearly 5000 theater-goers, and was located near the center of downtown Grand Rapids. Trainor also performed at theaters throughout the Midwest. Radio stations in the Midwest began seeking out Trainor and he was heard on stations such as WBMG, and WFNS in Gary, Indiana. In 1943, he was hired as a vocalist by Mercury Records, which also released his first album the same year. He also performed for the Armed Forces Radio Service. He also sang for the United States Navy Band. In summer 1940, Trainor traveled to Hollywood to sign a contract to appear on radio. He appeared in stars movies such as Down to Earth and Eagle Squadron, starring Boss encounters have four different variations and within each variation, there are two different outcomes.
