This center will be directed by Dr. Michael W. Fox, who will combine his experience in bone metabolism as a PhD graduate, funded by the National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases (NIAMS), and his research career in reproductive biology as a postdoctoral fellow funded by the American Society for Reproductive Medicine (ASRM). The Director of this developmental center, Dr. Fox, is an experienced investigator with a strong foundation in bone metabolism, but also with extensive background in reproductive biology and an exciting research agenda that will enhance collaborations with investigators in both areas of research. Dr. Fox's immediate goals will be to leverage the research infrastructure of the college and to develop preclinical research that will have a positive impact on the treatment of osteoporosis and other diseases with bone involvement. Dr. Fox's P-30 developmental center will be affiliated with the Comparative Medicine Center of the College of Veterinary Medicine. This center will support the proposed program as well as provide a broad range of animal models for developmental research with special emphasis on canine models. Four P-30 projects have been initiated and a summary of their current status is presented in this application. A major highlight of the P-30 developmental
