The expression of basic fibroblast growth factor (bFGF) during the process of bladder regeneration was investigated by immunohistochemistry and in situ hybridization. bFGF-immunoreactive cells were widely distributed in the regenerated bladder at 5, 7, 11, 14, and 21 days after induction of the injury. On the other hand, in the uninjured bladder, only basal cells were stained. In situ hybridization demonstrated the bFGF messenger RNA signal in the regenerating bladder after injury. The bFGF mRNA-positive cells were mainly found in the basal layer of the transitional cells of the regenerated bladder. Therefore, it is suggested that bFGF is associated with the onset and development of the regenerating bladder.
