ePub Oftalmologia Clinica: Jack Kanski y ExpertconsultÂ .Q: What is "Informational characters" in an OData feed? Some of our OData feeds (Exchange 2007) contain an informational characters field containing some enumerated items. For instance, the "Informational characters" field in one of these feeds contains A0 C2 E1 P1 The most obvious interpretation of this is that there is a mix of Unicode and non-unicode chars in these items. But what exactly are these? I could only find this document (page 143) and this blog post. Is there a list of what these items are, or what their meaning is? Or are they just garbage strings we put there to make the feed file more compact? A: This is according to this article: In plain English: Characters mentioned in the previous listing, which are not explicitly encoded with UTF-8, are identified in the header of the OData feed using one of the five types listed in the table. and then goes on to describe what these are (mostly, except for a few with weird names.
