In the wake of this attack, I'd like to take a moment to recognize the humble (and in most cases, hard working) people whose lives have been forever altered in the name of religious freedom. I've had the distinct privilege of working at a number of Catholic schools in the Los Angeles Archdiocese over the years. Having seen the personal sacrifices that religious faithful make to carry out the calling and mandate of their vocation, I can only surmise what it must be like to go to work every single day as a Catholic school teacher or administrator. For many of my students, Fatima is the first time they've ever encountered the Blessed Virgin Mary. I want them to know how special our Lady is. Fatima is an important part of the Catholic Faith for a number of reasons. For starters, Fatima is part of a series of apparitions that are still remembered by many Catholics, including Pope John Paul II, Pope Benedict XVI, and even Pope Francis. It is also the longest Marian apparition in recorded history, beginning on May 13, 1917 and continuing until today (as of June 13, 2017). In the present case, a 68-year-old Japanese woman was admitted to the cancer ward with a diagnosis of acute myelogenous leukemia. She suffered from bilateral pericarditis and had severe jaundice. The patient was treated as an infection of unknown origin with imipenem-cilastatin sodium, and the culture of her blood was positive for Yersinia enterocolitica. The clinical course indicated that the severe infection was likely to be secondary to pericarditis. The patient recovered from the infection without bacteremia, and the administration of imipenem-cilastatin sodium was discontinued. This case highlights that Yersinia enterocolitica may be a potentially causative agent in a patient with acute leukemia.Q: why is iostream::charbuf() returning '\0' in Ubuntu?
