The web site of the family of Dr. W.W. Kelly, a pioneering scientist and professor of pathology who specialized in malaria and infectious diseases, is now online with the goal of making his remarkable and sad story know to greater numbers. Kelly was the head of the Gastrointestinal Service at the University of Chicago Medical School from 1920 to 1941. In all his cases he was the "first to offer and administer massive doses of quinine to malaria cases with fatal results." He was then recalled to serve in the New York City Health Service at Bellevue Hospital, after which he became a volunteer at Columbia University's School of Medicine, where he had a distinguished career as a professor. In a fascinating and strangely sad story of the experiences of a researcher during the WWI, we have available online Kelly's papers on intestinal parasites, malaria, and dysentery (1917), his memoirs (1932), his notebooks (1929-1934), a book written about his clinical experiences at Bellevue (1914), articles in journals (1917-1923), some of his own pamphlets, a brief biography, and a reprint of a speech he gave at an American Malaria Society (AMS) meeting in 1930. Following is an account of his difficulties in Puerto Rico, from which he returned to the United States. In 1898, as the Spanish-American War was being fought, a pursuit vessel from San Juan, Puerto Rico, which was taken by the enemy, left its surgeon to continue his practice. Thus, when the British ship Apollo arrived for General Quiñones, Dr. Kelly and the ship's surgeon were the only doctors on the island. On July 19th, 1901, this physician and his assistant were hospitalized in the smallpox ward, where they remained for 12 days. "Upon this occasion, the flu threatened to be fatal and I was advised by the surgeon to make my escape from hospital in this chronic condition." The following year, 1902, he was again hospitalized for 14 days for dysentery and malaria, with a severely high temperature. He was treated at a "military post hospital" in Puerto Rico in 1913, afte

To successfully carry out a search, it is necessary to include the beginnings of the text you want to find and the Q: Get session vars after redirect I have session vars which I must pass to another page (varnish is out of question). To do so I store them into an array, add a key/value pair to the session var, and push the value to a redirect. When the redirect happens (varnish redirect) I need to get the values from my variable but I can't seem to do it, even when I call session_start() on the redirected page. The code works as it should, if I use $_SESSION to access the values but I can't use them. $uname ='myuser'; $vtext ='some text'; $usergroup = 'noadmin'; $arraySessions = ['user' => $uname, 'group' => $usergroup,
