In a study of global health that I conducted in Bangladesh and India among academic researchers and public health officials, I found that the overarching goal of the participants was to collaborate in order to gain a greater sense of the complexities of global health. Two key aspects of this collaboration were knowledge sharing among researchers and public health officials and the sharing of concepts and theories used in assessing the problems of global health. The studies were conducted in five African countries, namely South Africa, Mali, Senegal, Uganda and Burkina Faso. They were based on the following key questions: What is global health? What do those living in the Global North associate with global health? What are the major challenges to global health? What are the major problems in global health? What are some of the strategies used to tackle the problems of global health? What are the lessons learnt for global health? The study's participants and researchers from the Centre for Sustainable Development (CSD), a private South African research and development institution, and the Department of Social and Behavioural Sciences at the National Institute for Research in Tuberculosis (NIRT), were the focus of the study. The understanding of the concept and construct of global health among the participants varied across study sites. I have been trying to prevent the user from saving more than say 5 custom objects in a django view. Using this answer, I am successfully able to stop the user from creating more than 5 objects. But the code does not work when the user tries to access the previous page where there are already 5 objects. For example, if the user try to go back to the view that is trying to save the 5 objects, they get a 'ViewDoesNotExist'. I was able to get it working with 'ViewDoesNotExist'. But how can I prevent this when the user is on the previous page. Is there something in django that I am missing? How can I modify the previous answer to work for previous pages. So my idea is to prevent the user from accessing the previous page if there are 5 objects on the previous page. This is the django code class AddServiceViewSet(viewsets.ModelViewSet): serializer_class = ServicesSerializer queryset = Service.objects.all() filter_backends = (filters.OrderingFilter,) ordering_fields = 'order' ordering_parameters = { 'order': 'ASC', } search_fields = ['name', 'organisation', 'provider_type'] pagination_class = StandardResultsPerPage def create(self,
