Photoshop Elements and Photoshop can co-exist on the same computer and interface with the same user interface. (You can even use Photoshop Elements to open and edit large Photoshop files.) You can use Photoshop Elements to create your original image, edit that image, then save it as a Photoshop image that works with the Photoshop file format. Photoshop Elements and Photoshop use the same file format, and Photoshop Elements and Photoshop use the same tools and workflows. Editing and Workflow Elements provides many Photoshop-like tools for editing images like cropping, adjusting levels and curves, adjustments, and basic filters. Elements also features a few additional tools such as spot healing and the Hand tool for drawing fine lines. The basics of editing are similar to Photoshop. Elements includes many of the features of Photoshop, including layers, adjustment layers, custom brushes, the Lens Blur filter, and adjustment layers. However, Elements doesn't include Advanced Smart Objects, Gradient Map, Layer Masks and Layer Styles. There has been known in the art a method for producing a shaped article, such as a filter shaped article, from a porous silica-containing ceramic powder. The porous silica-containing ceramic powder is one in which the void ratio is about 40 to about 90% and the specific surface area is about 10 to about 200 m.sup.2/ g. The porous silica-containing ceramic powder is provided with holes in its surfaces and pores dispersed through the whole body thereof, and thus has a very high specific surface area. For this reason, when a shaped article is formed from the porous silica-containing ceramic powder, the shaped article can be made dense and have a uniform density distribution, and the shaped article can retain the performance thereof for a long period of time. Therefore, the porous silica-containing ceramic powder is useful as a starting powder for a shaped article, particularly a filter shaped article. The filter shaped article produced from the porous silica-containing ceramic powder generally comprises a tubular portion, a cylindrical portion disposed in the tubular portion, and a flat portion provided between the tubular portion and the cylindrical portion. The cylindrical portion generally has a diameter of about 0.5 to 10 mm and is a portion for filtration. When the ceramic powder is a composite ceramic powder prepared by bonding the porous silica-containing ceramic powder and another ceramic powder, the cylindrical portion can be disposed in a cylindrical sintered body produced from the ceramic powder by compression and sintering or by hot isostatic pressing (HIP). The porous silica-containing ceramic powder, however, generally has a specific surface area of about 10 to about 200 m.sup.2/ g. Thus, when the porous silica-containing ceramic powder is used to prepare a filter shaped article, a problem arises in that the packing capacity of the porous silica-containing ceramic powder is too small. Accordingly, there has been desired a porous silica-containing ceramic powder having a large specific surface area to overcome the above problem. To solve the above problem, Japanese Patent Laid-Open No. 59-194478 discloses a method for producing an improved porous ceramic powder, in which a ceramic powder to be improved is contacted with an aqueous solution of an aluminum compound and a phenol compound in the presence of a silica sol and an alkali solution. This method, however, still has problems in that gelation of the

Posts Tagged "Vanity" This is a guest post by Diane Louis; she blogs over at The Hollywood Series. I think all of us remember being a kid and wanting to be a princess! I grew up a tomboy with long hair and ripped tights but when we were little, I wanted to be a princess or fairy or other girl on a big horse. I knew that if I didn't have a stable of beautiful horses, I would be consigned to walking barefoot through a meadow or living in an anthill. But all of those lovely, magical princesses weren't for me. At least, not without my gaudy broomstick and magic wand or sword. When I reached adulthood, my real fantasy always centered on an equally beautiful wardrobe. My desire to be an actress, with its all-encompassing work life, made me check every dress off my wishlist, and I was armed with a long list of what I wanted. But as much as I loved fashion, I knew I could never afford it. So as time passed, I decided that, for me, fashion was about more than clothes and shoes. It was about character, about feeling special, and about feeling beautiful. After all, when I'm out in public, I feel more beautiful when I'm dressed in what I feel really is my style. Vanity So my goal is not, and has never been, to be particularly vain. I believe we all spend too much time worrying about the way we look and comparing our bodies to the bodies of others in the hopes of finding some sort of envy. Why would I want to be an actor? To be on the stage and on the screen? To act? To create something or to comment on society, whatever? Regardless of the reason, I've always struggled with the fact that I'm 5'2" and while I'm not particularly big in the chest, I'm as flat as I am in my hips and thighs, so I'm often mistaken for being underweight. To me, that's a complete contradiction. If I'm not the epitome of the perfect beauty, why do I struggle to find someone who will compliment me when I feel good about myself? On the other hand, the struggles that I have with my body are not physical. I have no muscle problems nor do I suffer with any
