to best go forward have been raised. The UK has set a target to cut its emissions by 60 percent by 2030. Two years ago, UK Chancellor of the Exchequer Philip Hammond said the country had no intention of joining the new round of negotiations for a global climate treaty to replace the Paris Agreement. In a short-term reply, Hammond claimed that the country was already doing as much as possible to reduce emissions. But, two years later, the country's climate plans are under question. Britain's international departure from the Paris Agreement has come as EU countries like the Netherlands, France and Poland have taken a more ambitious approach. The UK� e79caf774b
