I am currently learning violin. I have already bought a violin, but I want to learn to use surface string instruments for technical practice. After that, I plan to play violin or even a guitar. In short, I am hoping to make the change to another instrument using the violin as reference. My question is: Can I do it? What do I have to know? A: Theoretically yes. But from experience and practical experience I don't recommend it. This is of course a personal opinion, of course the rules can and usually do work, but I doubt it will be easy to get a smooth and rounded sound. Most string instruments are a compromise between warm tones and a more brittle tone when clean. And the sound can become even more brittle when played in a different instrument. Also, it is not easy to fill the space between different strings with fingers, when you do, the sound is a composite of strings playing together. If your plan is to play violin in lower frequencies range you'll be fine. That range is usually not affected much by the instrument you play in. Another thing, if you are not aware of it, that sounds get duller and duller when more violin strings are played. And on top of that, most string instruments have a soft start. And a ping from a surface instrument will most probably make it worse. I would recommend you try to keep things simple, maybe starting with a small 12 string instrument, and work your way up to a larger one. That will still be a lot of fun, and will give you a lot of experience to work with. Q: Auto populating from a DataFrame of other dataframe I have a DataFrame as:
