Now he wishes to share the same experience with others[Correlation between acetylcholine receptor gene variation and multiple congenital musculoskeletal disorders]. To explore whether the genetic polymorphism of the acetylcholine receptor gene (ACHR) is associated with MCSD. The frequency of the ACHR gene polymorphism between MCSD patients and normal controls was analyzed by PCR-RFLP in a case-control study. The distribution of the variant AA genotype and the rare allele A in the MCSD patients was found to be significantly higher than that of the normal controls. An increased frequency of variant genotypes (CA/AA) was also observed in patients with arthrogyriposis multiplex congenita (AMC) (45.5% vs. 15.8%, P Q: Java - Accessing variables on another class How can I access that variables on the constructor or class1. In class2 i created one variable (String str;) and I wanna use it in class1. public class class1{ public class2(String a, int b) { } } public class class2 { public class2 (String a, int b){ str = a; // some code here } } I know it may have duplicate codes but I just want to access str on the constructor class. A: It's not clear to me why you want to do this, but if you want to access the str variable from outside of class2 you can do this: public class class1{ public class2(String a, int b){ class

NASA's Hubble Space Telescope has captured a striking image of a planet that's about the size of Jupiter passing in front of a star—and this is no trick of the light. The planet, known as HD 189733b, sits almost exactly between Earth and the Sun, and its extraordinarily hot atmosphere blocks its starlight, producing a dark ring. In the black and white photo, the "ring" is several thousand miles wide. In this new image, shown above, Hubble detected the planet by observing the planet's gravity tugging on the star it's orbiting (HD 189733) along with its wavy pattern of stellar activity. Image released Jan. 15, 2012. The Hubble Space Telescope has sent back breathtaking images of planets, the stars around them, and the incredibly blue skies above them. But the time you've been waiting for has finally arrived: the first images of a planet passing in front of its star. The odd thing about the star is that it doesn't have the typical brownish color that astronomers usually associate with a star. In fact, it's almost as blue as the typical baby star's hue. For a start, the planet we've been waiting on for ten years is called HD 189733b. Even though we know its mass and temperature, the best we can tell about it is its atmospheric makeup. The planet is too far away to tell exactly what it's made of, but it has a thick atmosphere of carbon 6d1f23a050
