He worked at the Bureau of Entomology of the United States Department of Agriculture from 1892 to 1912, and then at the Carnegie Institute of Washington. He was also an amateur geologist and paleontologist. Biography Smith was born in Atlanta, Georgia, in 1858. As a young child, he developed an interest in insects and began collecting and rearing them in his home, eventually building the first insect collection in the United States. In 1886, he began work at the U.S.

Department of Agriculture's Bureau of Entomology, and he also became interested in the small, but prominent, fossil record of the early Cambrian. This interest was personal, as his older brother and lifelong friend Geiser G. Smith, an amateur paleontologist, was one of the first to uncover the Cambrian fossils of the Burgess Shale. Smith made major contributions to the knowledge of the taxonomy and physiology of the house fly, and in 1893 was one of the first to document mass collections of the insect in South Africa. He also made important advances in the knowledge of the biology of American cockroach, and in the taxonomy of the Botanophora family. Smith's interest in the life of insects and arthropods was further fostered through numerous field trips to the American West, where he took several important collections of specimens of copepods. Smith was also a forerunner in the development of the modern study of the epidemiology of insect pathogens. In 1905, Smith published his major work The House Flies of the United States and Canada. He also participated in the publication of the Diploma thesis of Edward Drinker Cope, the first American entomologist to publish a major work on palaeontology. In 1912, Smith accepted a position at the Carnegie Institute of Washington. While at the Carnegie Institute he was primarily involved with the study of soil microorganisms, and his work on an 6d1f23a050
