The primary goal of this study was to quantify the ability of early-morning electrooculography (EOG) to confirm or refute the presence of acute brain death. The secondary goal was to explore EOG characteristics associated with the presence of death. This was a retrospective review of all patients in an academic medical center intensive care unit from 2007 to 2011 who had early-morning EOGs conducted for diagnostic and/or therapeutic purposes. Case notes were reviewed for description of signs of death (hypothermia, apnea, marked neurologic deterioration). Diagnoses were not further adjudicated as brain death. EOGs were unblinded to the point of interpretation by an electrodiagnostic technologist. A total of 189 early-morning EOGs were reviewed. For patients with a diagnosis of brain death, the sensitivity and specificity of EOG for confirmation were 88% and 96%, respectively. The same were 45% and 95% for patients without a diagnosis of brain death. The specificity of EOGs for monitoring therapies was 97%. Half of the EOGs interpreted as normal were recorded during ventilation, but none were recorded during sedation or spontaneous ventilation. It is possible to confirm or refute the diagnosis of acute brain death with EOGs conducted at >7 am. Monitoring of therapies may be confounded by the presence of normal EOGs during periods of continuous ventilation.
