According to the Fund for World Population, China has one of the fastest growing economies in the world and will overtake the US as the world s largest economy by the year 2020 (Hammarstrom, 2005). Nevertheless, the Chinese economy has a strong foundation of cultural values in the traditional Chinese society, including a strong Confucian value system and the emphasis on the family. These Chinese values are emphasized in the Chinese education system, as demonstrated in past studies on social. British maritime trade With the period of the Roman Empire in its heyday, much of the trade of the Roman Empire followed the established routes of Egyptian, Greek, and Phoenician merchant ships, with the Romans using more commercial vessels, often with specific trade routes, for warship and military cargo transport. The Romans developed trade in the Mediterranean Sea with the Phoenicians and Greeks by the 3rd century BCE, established bases at Massilia (modern Marseille) and Salonica (modern Thessaloniki). The Romans also developed trade in the Black Sea, and the areas between the Black Sea and the Caspian Sea were known as "Pontus Euxinus". In these regions, the Romans' influence created trade routes that, although sometimes not travelled by merchant ships, still followed the established routes and were used by the Romans. During the Roman Empire, trade followed two types of routes. On one hand, there were the established Roman trade routes. On the other hand, there were trade routes that developed during the period, which in some cases were as important as those of the Romans, as the Romans started to use them as their routes. 6d1f23a050
