The one-car train was carrying passengers from Birmingham, Ala., to Atlanta when the explosion occurred just before 8 p.m. local time at an abandoned rail yard not far from an Athens hospital, according to The Wall Street Journal. A U.S. official briefed on the incident who was not authorized to discuss the matter by name said it had to do with hazardous materials and the train was going to be removed, according to the newspaper. Athens Mayor Keisha Lance Bottoms said the derailment happened at a railroad crossing on Tom Brown Station Road, near Grady Hospital, and that the tracks are part of a line known as the Southern Railway of Georgia. "The train was traveling in the area, to and from Grady Hospital," Bottoms said in a statement. "The explosion occurred near the crossing and the injuries were in the area where the explosion occurred. Authorities said the injured people were taken to Grady Hospital. The sheriff's department tweeted that the highway was closed but that it had reopened at 11 p.m. "A metro Atlanta commuter train derailed in southwest Georgia Thursday evening," the Associated Press reported. "The train was traveling from Birmingham, Ala. to Atlanta when the fire started in the small car." Authorities told CBS46 that there was no foul play involved. "We are working to determine at this point if it was an act of terrorism," Athens-Clarke County Sheriff's Office spokesman Sgt. Warren Pickard said. "It does not appear to be a terrorist incident, but c6a93da74d
