Theobald.png.Q: Spring Boot - url mappings and spring security We are building an Spring Boot application and are using JWT for authentication and authorization. I've read that I need to include something like the following in my security-context.xml: for every route that I want to bypass security for. As of right now, I just have one route in the security config and it is for a secured controller (I've called it MyController). This works fine, but all the controllers I have are defined in a separate package outside of the one with the security config. When calling /customer/1 the request isn't going through the security filter (because of the above config) and is being routed to our CustomerController which is in the correct package. What do I need to do to make this work? A: Edit: After testing it, I changed my config as follows: c6a93da74d
