in this paper we describe the development of an inclusive design canvas for the design process that is currently being used by the joint bioenergy institute (jbei) to develop and optimize the production of biofuels. the jbei inclusive design canvas is composed of a set of design-related terms and concepts that are used to describe the components of a design, as well as a set of design tools that are used to facilitate the production of the design. the jbei inclusive design canvas is being developed through a series of iterative, multi-disciplinary design workshops that are currently underway at jbei. the workshops bring together experts from a broad range of disciplines including engineering, architecture, landscape architecture, interior design, and social design. in this paper we describe the production of the jbei inclusive design canvas, for which the first iteration of the language was developed at the jbei design challenges 2011 workshop. the workshop was divided into three sessions: (i) definition of the inclusive design canvas, (ii) synthesis of inclusive design canvas terms, and (iii) implementation of inclusive design canvas terms in design tools and software. in this paper we describe the final version of the language developed at the design challenges 2011 workshop, as well as the results of a set of workshops and design challenges that have now been conducted at jbei. a total of thirteen design challenges have been conducted in 2011, with more planned for 2012 and beyond. the results of these design challenges have also provided feedback to help refine the language of the inclusive design canvas.
