Hi, Your date format is wrong. You need to format as a number or text, not as date. Format as text and this is what you will see: https://t.co/7nfnSg6sqY NOTE I only posted the text that appears, do not forget to copy and paste David is right - the date is stored as a number in the cell. The only way you can find out what the number value is is to use an advanced formula like he gave you. For the VLOOKUP you need to set the format of the column to your Date format Thanks for the response. Following your advice I formatted the date as a number in the cell, then used the formula: =TEXT(VALUE(F2), "dd/mm/yyyy") My sample is here: https://t.co/JqxX7pnd5E Unfortunately it is still giving me the #VALUE error. Any ideas please? In Excel, the date in a cell is stored as a number. The way to change it is to format the cell as a text, not as a date. If you format the cell as a date, you will only see the date part and not the number. For example, if you format this cell as a date, you will only see the date. I have a text file, I wanted to put it in to a spreadsheet as the date and put it in a cell, but it keeps saying #VALUE! This is what I have done: =SUBSTITUTE(VALUE(F2),"/"","") But, it only puts the date in it, not the number! Is there a reason why it is doing this? Hi David, If you choose to sort a worksheet by date in ascending order, by default the days will be displayed as dd. The way you display the days will depend on how you've configured the number format for the date, but you can use the COUNT() function to determine the number of days in the month. (The %d format includes day of week but you can get the number of days in a month by using the COUNT(MONTH()) function, or the number of days in the year by using the COUNT(YEAR()) function.

Unformat Serial Number

Hi Mike, When you apply a date format in Excel, youre specifying the form of the date, but you havent specified any sort order. By default, dates will be sorted in ascending order, so you will need to specify descending order if you need the serial numbers in descending order. Hi Sanjay, Yes, the Cell A1 in your excel file can contain a date that is not formatted. If you want to see the date properly, try to format A1 as text. Without formatting, excel will show the date serial number. Hi Steve, If you are applying a date format to A1 that you want to display as date serial number, but the cell contains a text string which happens to look like a date, you cannot format it as a date because it contains 2 parts, a date serial number and a date number. If you format the cell as text, and type a number in the cell, excel will return an error and display a #VALUE! in the cell Hi Mike, When you have a date in a cell, it is actually serial number of the date. To format that cell as date, either click on the cell and do Format > Number. The date appears on the other side of the decimal point (7/31/2009 15:31:40). If you format the cell as text and type a number, excel will return an error. In that case, apply a number format. Hi Rafi, You are right, this is a common question. Using the ISNUMBER function, you can determine whether a cell contains a serial number (number only) or a text string (number plus text). Thanks for getting back to me, Kamil! The reason why it doesn't work is because the sort order of the serial number date format is via Serial Number. So, if the serial number starts with S, then that is the sort order, so '0000' will have the sort order of S-0001. However, the format of the part date is via Date, so the sort order of '0001' is via date. If you compare the sort orders of those two, you'll see that the serial number sort order is before the date sort order. Since '0000' has a serial number after the date, it returns a serial number format rather than the date format. 5ec8ef588b
