the micro four thirds digital system is small in size, making it much more convenient to carry around, and so far, olympus is the only brand to offer dslr-like photo quality without an optical viewfinder. and olympus is the only brand to offer a video-ready camera system for photographers who want to shoot video. the gh2 was also chosen by the judges for its ability to function as a perfect point-and-shoot camera as well as a dslr. it can use both full-frame and aps-c lenses from all the big brands like nikon, canon, and pentax with full-frame lenses, and olympus also sells its own om line of lenses that use the same camera mount as many of the other lenses. compatible lenses from other manufacturers also are also available. i just got my sh5 two days ago and i just tested it. it has some good stuff on it but its kinda small. the handheld studio shot is the best. its also great for outdoor, as its weather proof. it also records underwater and has a retractable screen. there are many categories on youtube and on vimeo, such as sexy, best concept, rock, airport, love, cute, and many more. you can also search for specific keywords on youtube and find anything you want to see. i have this camera and i totally recommend it, if you want to produce something good. i like this camera a lot. it is small and light, and is easy to take anywhere, even in a big city. it is also very easy to carry with you, so you will not have to carry tons of equipment. the video quality is also very good, the only problem is that it has a hard time focusing in low light, but for me this is not a problem. i also like the screen, its much easier to shoot with than when you are using an optical viewfinder. its also good for beginners, since it is very easy to learn how to use. one thing i have noticed is that you can get some good shots of medium sized animals, but it is still a little difficult to get really good shots, since it is not easy to let the animals be in the exact place you want them to be. i have posted a few videos on youtube, they are all mine, but i would really like to increase the number of videos i post, since i have to upload them somewhere and then wait for someone to watch them and like them.

the use of 4 years old rx10iii at iso 6400 here is not good. i have my doubts about the images on this website. the images on nikonrumors shows low iso noise at low iso and good low light performance. the same images on this website show poor low light performance at very high iso. i can't find a link to the original review, but i can only assume that "megapixels" is just a way of comparing with other cameras in a particular size class without getting into the details of other differences. it is actually misleading, as, even today, the 1-series sensors don't have the same resolution as the 1x series (600 vs. 41) by any stretch of the imagination. i also assume that the review also didn't mention even the difference in pixel size between the aps-c class cameras, such as the fujifilm x100fs vs. the nikon or canon, and did not try to evaluate the impact of the difference in size. i'm not saying it doesn't matter, it just seems a bit limited, like going to the grocery store and comparing apples vs. oranges. this seems like an incomplete review. for example, the "competition" of the sony is the nikon d750 not the sony. the competition isn't the lens they are using. the camera is the only thing that matters, don't get me wrong. i am just saying comparing the h2s should be done with the sony vs. it's competitors. the nikon is nikon. canon is canon, i own a sony a7ii and it is better than the nikon in many ways, it has better low light low noise, better performance in low light, better af. the reason i go for the sony is for the d750 is the size of the body is cheaper than the a7ii at the same price. sony cameras are 3 pound heavier than the nikon which is much bigger and more comfortable to use. the auto focus is better. sony lenses have the best build quality and more importantly the best af algorithms are comparable to the canon and nikkon aps-c lenses. i like the ergonomics of the sony better the way the weight feels in your hands. and the battery life on the sony is much better than the nikon.
