In the last version of Adobe Photoshop, I was using a spotlight to find a specific video the way I used to use the search function in Windows Media player can be a real pain. It depends on the exact filenames or tags that the creator used. Then I discovered a set of four keys on my keyboard that would tab through video files much quicker. I've been using the keys since then. The Triangle key (Windows) or the Arrow keys (soon Macs) or the Arrow keys (PC) or the Page Up (PC) or the Page Down (PC) will each select a specific file. Usually, red will select the first file in the folder, and blue will select the last file in the folder. Use the Tab (PC) or spacebar (Mac) to highlight one of the files, and press X (key) or Return (PC) or Enter (Mac) to start the editing process. An important editor for the new version is the ability to edit Color Tones and Shadows. If you open a photo and have the most effective tool for correcting color issues, you will do them immediately. The Shadow and Tint effect controls let you add a gradient to the shadow or alter the color of the base layer. For example, you can make the shadow almost totally black, and the tinge a much lighter color, all in one direction. This is a classic technique. Now you can apply the effect to any current adjustment or pick a new one from the color controls, and choose the same effect.
