Azaan is the time for the followers of Islam to. it seems, is based on user's self-perception of their own physical condition. As one would expect, the participants' physical condition could affect their rating of the outer sensations; but after controlling for their self-perception and objective physical fitness, the muscular sensation only showed a main effect for the patient-control groups and not the patient-healthier group. The results might indicate that patients with more physical impairments may expect a lower muscular sensation, but actually this was not the case. The only difference between patient groups was the expected decrease in muscular sensation for the patient-control groups, which corroborates our clinical experience in the patient-healthier group. The result of two one-way ANOVA on expected and actual muscular sensation were not significantly different for the patient groups (i.e., patient-control and patient-healthier groups) and their differences were not significant after Bonferroni correction. With respect to the mental sensation, for healthy participants, the results showed a main effect for gender  $\{F(1, 27) = 6.5, p = .018, \eta^2 = .19\}$ , with women reporting higher expectations than men. Importantly, we did not find a main effect of physical condition  $\{F(1, 27) = 2.3, p = .140, \eta^2 = .08\}$ , nor a group by gender interaction  $\{F(1, 27) = 0.004, p = .957, \eta^2 = .001\}$ .
