KeyMacro can be used to create a new custom keyboard shortcut for an application by specifying the command line used to launch that application. It can also be used to assign command line arguments to an existing keyboard shortcut. The KeyMacro installer will launch the application and prompt the user to enter a Command Line Arguments list. It will then offer to create a new keyboard shortcut that can be used with the Command Line Arguments passed in. You will also be able to assign existing keyboard shortcuts to a new Command Line Arguments list. This can be an extremely handy feature as it allows you to assign a custom Command Line Arguments list to an existing keyboard shortcut without changing the existing application. I've used it myself to assign a new keyboard shortcut to the Firefox web browser so I can launch it from my Start Menu and I can specify the Command Line Arguments that I want to use. Interface-wise KeyMacro is a simple application with a small Help Menu. It's a bit on the lightweight side but everything is there for you to use. There is no options menu as such but there is a nice explanation of how the application works and how it can be used. KeyMacro can be used to assign command line arguments to a keyboard shortcut. To do this, click the Add button from the application menu and you can simply enter the Command Line Arguments you want. After pressing the OK button you can assign a keyboard shortcut to the Command Line Arguments you entered by clicking the Keyboard Shortcuts tab. Once you've created the keyboard shortcut you can assign the Command Line Arguments to the keystroke that is being used. It's fairly simple to use and there is no need to modify your Command Line Arguments in the registry. In closing, KeyMacro is a great tool for anyone who uses keyboard shortcuts a lot. It's easy to use and can be used to assign keyboard shortcuts to Command Line Arguments.
