See, for example, U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,228,059; 5,260,151; 5,264,953; 5,314,634; 5,319,638; 5,353,124; 5,357,387; 5,376,858; 5,405,096; 5,471,057; 5,479,236; 5,548,657; 5,573,166; 5,656,491; and 5,689,717. In U.S. Pat. No. 5,328,460, a method and apparatus for producing a radiographic image of a subject is disclosed. In particular, a method and apparatus is provided that utilizes a controllable linear accelerator and a sharp source of penetrating radiation. A radiographic detector is provided that has a photosensitive layer. The photosensitive layer is deposited upon a substrate, and the substrate is positioned between the subject and the source of penetrating radiation. The method and apparatus described in U.S. Pat. No. 5,328,460 requires that the substrate itself be the radiographic detector. In U.S. Pat. No. 5,453,792, a method and apparatus for producing a radiographic image of a subject is disclosed that includes a flat panel imaging device that includes a first polymer-based layer and a second glass based layer with an intermediate barrier layer therebetween. The panels are stacked to form a sandwich. The sandwich is exposed to penetrating radiation that deposits energy at the first polymer-based layer. When a voltage is applied across the panels, imagewise charge carriers are generated in the first polymer-based layer and deposited in the barrier layer. The imagewise deposited charge carriers are transported through the barrier layer and stored in the second glass layer that is the energy detector. In U.S 04aeff104c
